A stylized landscape with rolling hills in shades of green and brown. A path of white footprints winds across the hills, leading towards a bright white area in the distance. The overall aesthetic is clean and modern.

2. Oil Prices—Transport Planning

[Volume:647;Page:16753]

2. JEANETTE FITZSIMONS (Co-Leader—Green) to the Minister of Transport: What advice, if any, has she received about the likely price path of oil over the next 5 years; and how will this impact on transport planning?

Hon ANNETTE KING (Minister of Transport) : Clearly, oil prices affect the movement of people and freight, and the amount of revenue from fuel excise duties that goes into the National Land Transport Fund. Officials are keeping a watchful eye on price movements.

Jeanette Fitzsimons: Is the Minister satisfied that when Land Transport New Zealand determines the economics of new motorways it uses the 2002 oil price of $26 a barrel, adjusted only by the consumer price index, when today the cost of oil is over $130 a barrel;

Petrol prices jump again – drivers' assess options

4:00PM Monday May 12, 2008

View as a single page Page 1 of 2

Nearly one in five New Zealanders say even if the price of petrol went above $5 per litre it wouldn't make a difference to their fuel use, a survey shows.

But for a quarter of New Zealanders, petrol prices breaking the $2 per litre barrier will trigger a significant reduction in fuel

BP prices reached $1.93 a litre today.

Fuel price delights walkers

5:00AM Monday July 28, 2008
By Mathew Dearnaley

Soaring fuel prices are Dan Burden's ally in his mission to resurrect walking as a universally desirable means of transport, prosperity, health and happiness.
